The campaign operators used these stolen accounts to send further phishing messages to their friends, generating significant revenue via online advertising commissions. According to PIXM, a New York-based AI-focused cybersecurity firm, the campaign peaked in April-May 2022 but has been active since at least September 2021. PIXM was able to trace the threat actor and map the campaign down to one of the identified phishing pages hosting a link to a traffic monitoring app (whos.amung.us) that was publicly accessible ithout authentication. Massive scale of abuse While it is unknown how the campaign initially started, PIXM states victims arrived at phishing landing pages from a series of redirects originating from Facebook Messenger. As more Facebook accounts were stolen, the threat actors used automated tools to send further phishing links to the compromised account's friends, creating massive growth in stolen accounts. "A user's account would be compromised and, in a likely automated fashion, the threat actor would log in to that account and send out the link to the user's friends via Facebook Messenger," explains PIXM in the report. While Facebook has protection measures to stop the dissemination of phishing URLs, the threat actors used a trick to bypass these protections. The phishing messages used legitimate URL generation services such as litch.me, famous.co, amaze.co, and funnel-preview.com, which would be a problem to block as legitimate apps use them. Some of the URLs used in the phishing campaign (PIXM) After discovering that they could gain unauthenticated access to the phishing campaign stats pages, the researchers found that in 2021, 2.7 million users had visited one of the phishing portals. This figure went up to 8.5 million in 2022, reflecting the massive growth of the campaign. Snap from the dashboard of the exposed analytics service (PIXM) By diving deeper, the researchers identified 405 unique usernames used as campaign identifiers, each having a separate Facebook phishing page. These phishing pages had page views ranging from only 4,000 views to some in the millions, with one as high as 6 million page views. Sample of the identified dissemination users (PIXM) The researchers believe that these 405 usernames represent only a fraction of the accounts used for the campaign. After the victim enters their credentials on the phishing landing page, a new round of redirections begins, taking them to advertising pages, survey forms, etc. One of the ads showed to phished users (PIXM) The threat actors receive referral revenue from these redirects, which are estimated to be millions of USD at this scale of operation. Tracing the threat actor PIXM found a common code snippet on all landing pages, which contained a reference to a website that has been seized and constitutes part of an investigation against a Colombian man identified as Rafael Dorado. Website belonging to the campaign operator It is unclear who seized the domain and placed the notice on the site. A reverse whois lookup revealed links to a legitimate web development company in Colombia and old sites offering Facebook "like bots" and hacking services. PIXM shared the results of its investigation with the Colombian Police and Interpol, but as they note, the campaign is still ongoing, even though many of the identified URLs have gone offline. Signal, the secure messaging app, has been hit by a hack that leaked its users phone numbers.The attack means that 1,900 users have been compromised, with their phone numbers and SMS codes exposed. That means that hackers could potentially register those accounts onto a new device.The hack is of particular concern to Signal, given that it is intended as a private messaging app and is regularly recommended for use by people whose messages need to stay especially secure.The attack was not conducted directly on Signal, but rather on Twilio, a separate company that provides services to developers. Signal uses its services to verify users' phone numbers when they sign up.Last week, Twilio announced that it had been hacked, with attackers breaching its internal systems and accessing customer data. Signal was one of those customers, and so its users were caught up in the attack.The hacker appeared to try and look for three accounts, and successfully re-registered one of them.Signal says that it has now revoked the attackers' access, that the hack has been shut down by Twilio, and that any affected users will be notified. Those that may have been caught up in the attack will receive text messages telling them to register their account again, and their accounts will be unregistered on any devices they are using.The company also advised users to enable the "registration lock" feature that can be found in settings. That is intended to explicitly protect against such attacks - but it must be opted into manually.It said that some of the problem is a result of vulnerability in the telecom system, used to send text messages and phone calls, which is still used to verify phone numbers on Signal. "While we don't have the ability to directly fix the issues affecting the telecom ecosystem, we will be working with Twilio and potentially other providers to tighten up their security where it matters for our users," it said in an announcement.The hack did not mean that the attacker got access to message history, profile information or contact lists, Signal advised. Likewise, message history is stored on specific devices, so that even if an account was re-registered they would have stayed secure.However, an attacker would have been able to send and receive new messages, from someone else's number, if their details were caught up in the attack. WATCH LIVEWelcome, Your AccountLog Out SpyMSG The most effective solution for users looking for a way to track FB Messenger is the free spy app SpyMSG. The software in the free version is completely similar to the regular version. The Facebook Messenger hacking app also sets up account tracking, allowing the user to find out what's going on in the account in real time. At the moment, the program is the optimal spy app for installing online Messenger tracking. Yes, but there are a limited number of applications for this. In fact, you need to find a full-fledged spyware capable of hacking Messenger by username or phone number. SpyMSG is a spy app that can hack someone else's Messenger account without a phone number. Messenger hacking program has a wide range of features and a good reputation, which allows you to call it a proven way to hack Messenger. Information from the account history will be loaded into your dashboard after you start the session. 5 I track my friends through online spy. They don't understand what's going on and how I do it. Believe me, it's a lot of fun. 5 My Facebook Messenger profile was hijacked. I have no idea who needed it, but it's a fact. The support service just ignored me and then I restored through this site simply and quickly. 5 I will say just a few words. The application does not need to be installed. Therefore, it is simply the best for today. The launch will take you about five minutes, and you will also save your nerves. The result is just fire 5 Yeah, and I thought Messenger chats were completely confidential and securely encrypted, but no... Do not store important information in messengers, use your own encrypted communication channels - that's my advice to you. 5 In a short time this tool has become my favorite spy app. They have gone through many updates since the beginning and almost comprehended perfection. This tool is really a great value for every user. 5 I was badly let down by my employee. In the correspondence, he confessed everything, but later deleted his messages. The function of restoring deleted messages helped me a lot to resolve a conflict situation in the company.
